KLRBA MIXER

September 12, 2019

This month's KLRBA gathering took place at the Keystone Golf & Country Club. Members exchanged ideas and introduced themselves and the business they represent.

Our speaker Scott Kornegay, Keystone Heights City Manager, shared more information about the upcoming Cityscape Project that will debut this coming Fall season. Scott explained how the project will greatly enhance our downtown; improve safety by providing safe, clearly marked pedestrian crossings; allow more organized parking with delineated spaces; and provide much improved street lighting.

Brad Harvey, co-owner of Keystone Golf and Country Club, shared his mission to help children with autism. He spoke about the lack of information in our community about autism, the fastest growing developmental disability on a local as well as national level. He added that autism places undue pressure on parents and educators to help children affected by this disability. He encouraged all to support this important mission.

Deirdre Murphy from Watson Realty and Graylyn Taner-Rice from Santa Fe Electronics outlined the products and services they have available for the community. In addition, Mayor Karen Lake shared partial results of a personal survey she sent out to residents asking opinions on what city priorities should be.

André Gourd announced the addition of Phil Jones as a partner with Realty Productions Co. Phil has been in the web design business for the last 14 years, and both their businesses will merge into Realty Productions Co. André added that Phil will become the person responsible for administration and web design while André will be involved with sales and marketing.

Member Comments:

"I have found that KLRBA not only provides good leadership initiatives and offers ideas for growth, but it also encourages businesses to get involved in community groups that need support and encouragement. Let's keep it up!"
